

Which of these soups contain a first aid dressing?

The answer is both.

The only defense against a food contamination prosecution is 'due diligence'.

In criminal law, due diligence is the only available defense to a crime that is one of strict liability. Once the criminal offense is proven, the defendant must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that they did everything possible to prevent the act from happening. It is not enough that they took the normal standard of care in their industry - they must show that they took every reasonable precaution.

Now you have seen this can you really allow white dressings in your kitchen and really claim 'due diligence' under the health food act?
